

We would like to introduce you and your family to Norman Mouse, his Mama and Papa and little sister, Emily. They are a typical LDS family facing typical family issues. Norman will be a featured guest in The Arizona Beehive for as long as he can be a part of our family. We hope that is a very long time! We think you will grow to love Norman as we have.

Starting with this issue we will have Norman hidden in the pages for you and your children to find. Norman may be hiding behind an article or peaking around a picture! If you find Norman let us know on our Instagram or Facebook pages. You just might receive a prize in the mail if you find him!

Join Norman in this new and colorful picture book series as he learns lessons and values that are specifically written for LDS children. You can find him, his books, and his family easily at norman-themormon.com. There you can also learn about the amazing creators of Norman, Danette Smith and her lovely daughter Brittany Smith.

what to send, particularly when their missionary hits the humble stages of the mission and, when asked, says, "I've got everything I need here, I'm fine." Trust them, but also trust the spirit and pray about what you might send that will convey your love and support. LDS stickers (or other things to hold kids' attention), teaching aids, and hygiene supplies are a start, but rely on your knowledge of your missionary for personal items.

Missionaries are individuals. Listen to what they're going through to know what they need from a package home. Elder Porter Empey, from Idaho Falls, prefers a package of goodies to share with his companion. A package like that can soothe tensions and improve the quality of a companionship. Elder Parra, given the choice, thought a small package, meaningful only to him and his family, would be perfect.

If your missionary is still preparing, pay attention now to learn what they'll need in the field. If your missionary is currently serving, reread their last few letters and see what you can do to show them you care.
